Click image to watch 10. Secret Agent P.O.V. Similar to Desert Strike, the game has you control P.O.V. as a secret agent who must quickly tap on the correct target for number of points. The more targets you hit, the more points you earn. I started playing this one a long time ago but I will try to use it when I need to calm down a bit, as it is more of a meditation game. Recommended for you: Game "Secret Agent P.O.V." Gameplay: Click image to watch 11. It Hurts to Play I downloaded this game a year ago and tried playing it for a while but I got bored after playing it for 3 days. It is rather simple and easy game to play, but is made to count the number of times you press your finger on the screen. Recommended for you: Game "It Hurts to Play" Gameplay: Click image to watch 12. Tap Your Finger Tap your finger to the floor. The faster you tap, the faster you will get points. Try to get as many points as you can while counting the seconds and see how long you can last. Recommended for you: Game "Tap Your Finger" Gameplay: Click image to watch 13. Tap Away Try and tap around the board in different ways. 14. Shove the Suits Away Try and match the color together by alternately shuffling the suits, reds, yellows, greens and blues. 15. Nose for a Walnut Try to find as many walnuts as you can by placing your finger on every single icon of the word "walnut" on the screen. 16. Be the Toad Look through the letters until you find the one you need. You can find its letter either on its position or the shape. When you find the letter, tap it in order to complete the word. 17. Ta-Da! Tap the buttons (that are in yellow) in order to call numbers and watch them fly through the sky and back to the screen. The faster you tap, the more points you will gain. 18. Bridge Play a game of bridge by drawing lines between cards, trying to connect the most cards. 19. Deck of Cards Draw a random card and match it in

What's new in Blood Will Be Spilled - Artbook:

Starship Operator Starship Design TNG's "Star Trek" is often credited as the first television show to depict space travel in the Star Trek universe. While it is true that the concept is found in the original series episode "The City on the Edge of Forever", it was really Paramount which brought real space-sailors aboard their ships for the newly established television show. Thus it seems entirely fitting that the franchise's first starship would be a first-generation laser-vessel and that that it would be named after a constellation. Think of the Enterprise's first generation as a 21st century starship from an alternate timeline, a bridge-up of Ensenada with a warp core engineered under a dark cloud of heavy ionization and photon torpedoes. The ship was designed under the codename Starling 6000 "Shiloh" and was the first to the cutting edge of warp-fusion propulsion. Because of the state of warp-fusion technology, the bridge-up of "Shiloh" is a single-interconnected command center with no spatially separated seats or stationbale modules. In the distance, a hyper-drive field dishes a dim green glow (much as vista screens do when superluminal speeds are achieved) and the spacedrift hyper particles are employed as usual as shipboard padding and light. The matter-antimatter thruster sends a driver for ship-wide maneuvers. The final form of the ship had a revised hull design to accommodate her new electron-beam weapons, including a forward-facing toroidal electron-beam projector. Crew stations were reserved for the captain and first officer only - not crewmembers. The Enterprise was manned by a crew of 1000-2000, had unique modules (mostly with an Annixantha look-a-like) and could arrive at Warp-9 in just 16 hours. In Trek lore, starships of the Trekkie clime tend to be burly, utilitarian beasts of war. Certainly, there's a lot going for pure utility in a set of hulls like those seen in TNG's lead-off story, "Shore Leave." The Enterprise-B's predominately transverse section, streamlined, and totally lacking in crew comfort was a fine design, and one can see why it was adopted for the series. However, while entertaining to geek out with, this type of design
