The chief executive of Housemarque, Ronny Tsai, showed off a slide at PAX West revealing that the studio is working on a game for the PC VR platform called Space Pirate Trainer. The game is a 2D action title for the Oculus Rift and HTC Vive with 5 VR minigames that mixes up arcade-style thrills with fetch-like RPG characters. The demo is a bit reminiscent of Super Hexagon and VR Frontiell which combine two unique, fast-paced game genres to create a multiplayer party game that can provide hours of fun. Speaking to Siliconera, Tsai said that the developers started working on the VR game because, "We were a bit tired of running around in the same level," adding that they want the game to be "a different type of game that's not a shooter." The demo represents the early stages of work on the game, as they're currently working out the controls and level design. You can view the slide show below. Here's the official description: Soar through the eponymous training facility of the Space Pirate's flagship spaceship, the Goliath. This is the final frontier of the universe, a stage where the most elite Space Pirates must test their skills and resolve in order to earn the great treasure of the Goliath's hold. Leap into the epic steampunk universe of the VR Training Facility, and prepare to discover what it takes to be the greatest Space Pirate Commander ever! See the new VR Training Facility prototype in action at PAX West 2015. A few months ago, Housemarque announced that they are working on a new VR game called "New Nintendo 3DS Vibe," a reality-bending experience available only on the Nintendo 3DS platform. You can get more information about the game by clicking here. Space Pirate Trainer is expected to debut on Steam sometime in 2017. We
