on a relatively high frequency band. In an OFDM system, one data frame is transmitted during a plurality of consecutive subcarriers. According to the related art, a low pass filtering process is performed on a radio frame in an OFDM system. In an OFDM system, a number of consecutive subcarriers included in the radio frame cause a signal to lose energy during the low pass filtering process. Furthermore, in an OFDM system, the data frames are dispersed during the low pass filtering process because the magnitude of the time domain is changed by the data rate. As a result, a great number of consecutive
