Here are a few tips for a new user, drawn from my own experience and from discussions with Photoshop users of varying skill levels: Use all the tools. Photoshop comes with a wide selection of tools for manipulating images, including drawing tools, filters, color correction tools, the selection tools, warping tools, and more. You won't be able to use all the tools to create a new image, but you can combine tools to do various things. Most of the tools are labeled, and you can select tools from the toolbox and view the tool tips to learn what they do. Create and save projects. Photoshop is a tool for creating and editing multiple images at once, including documents, Web pages, and so on. You need to create projects so that you can save and later revert to those projects with all the images that you're working on at one time. You can create a Photoshop project, which you can also save as a Photoshop file. You can then reopen that project using the Photoshop file to make edits or create new images without having to re-create the project and save it. You can find out more about creating a project in Chapter 11. Use the Eyedropper tool. When you create a color that you want in an image, you can select the color as a preset by using the Eyedropper tool. You can then duplicate that preset color and use it as a new color. It's convenient to have a preset color from the image you're working on, such as the color that you want for a photo's background, or a white color for Web pages. You can find out more about the Eyedropper tool in Chapter 4. Select the duplicate tool. If you're editing an image and want to duplicate a section of the image, the Tool Options dialog box has a menu of options that let you select what part of an image you want to select (and paste elsewhere). This tool is called the _duplicate tool._ You can learn more about this tool and set its options in Chapter 4. ## Adding Effects to Photos Photoshop has many layers, and you can apply different effects to individual layers. The more layers that you have, the more complicated your image will be, so you need to know how to make things easier by applying effects to layers, and to keep your layers organized. You may want to create a new layer for each effect that you apply, so that you can make multiple changes to the same photo.

GIF files (Windows) and JPG files (Mac) are supported as alpha channels. Stretching or shrinking the graphic will be the same as the real size. A modifier like Pen Pressure can be attached to Layer Styles to allow you to use pressure to the selected brush tool area. These brushes are generally available as separate downloads from Adobe. The most commonly used brush types are named after the type of tool they are derived from. Tip: The toolbar is your most valuable tool. Having too many tools can cause confusion and frustration. Group them in folders as you use them. If you have never used a brush before, you may want to create a new brush or just a free-form one. Free-form brushes are just like paint, you can draw out the bristles and shape the brush. A brush's size and number of bristles can be changed as you use it. To change the size of the brush, just move the Double-click on the Brush tool, or use the hotkeys Ctrl / . or Ctrl / J. Brush Width: This is the size of the area of the brush. Brush Pressure: This is the pressure that will be applied to the selected area. As you change the size and type of the brush, it is up to your imagination and imagination to play with your brush. You can create the perfect brush by changing the size of the brush, its shape, and the pressure. You can create a new brush by: * Double-clicking on the brush tool * Selecting the brush tool from the tools palette and clicking and holding down to use as a brush shape. To use the brush shape select from the drop-down menu which you want to use. * Selecting a brush from the Brushes panel * Selecting one of the brushes from the Brush Presets panel. * Picking a new brush from the Brush Presets panel. * Or, starting with a new brush in the Brush panel and clicking the 'New Brush' button. * Pick a brush and it will appear on the Brush panel's brush presets. * To use a brush preset, select the paintbrush on the Brush panel's brush presets menu.
