“An internationally successful online RPG.” The World started receiving a great number of inquiries and orders after the tremendous success of the “morphing” of “The World of Minna de Hation.” The rise in popularity is prompting the continuation of the MMORPG and planning for the future of “The World of Minna de Hation.”

● The World ~4chan Shuffle Live

■ NEW!

In July 2014, the 4chan group “Sosumi Shuffle” got married, and now a spinoff group, “The World ~4chan Shuffle Live~,” is born. In this group, brides and grooms will gather together, while 9 to 12 couples play together, and the sisters and brothers (etc.) whom the couples meet will be randomly selected and matched, reducing the number of visitors through a form of shuffle; in other words, they play together instead of the two people playing separately.

● The World: Tamagotchi Minna de Hation in the Official Peacemaker RPG

By converting Tachibana Marika’s story to Hignight, The World: Tamagotchi Minna de Hation joins the official Peacemaker RPG. Tamagotchi Minna de Hation was the timid 15-year-old daughter of Nokatsu and her childhood friend. Tamagotchi Minna de Hation was a child who let her sword be concealed in her voice.

By inserting her into The World: Tamagotchi Minna de Hation, our staff created a story where Tamagotchi Minna de Hation’s relationship with her dog can be shared with Tamagotchi Minna de Hation’s greatest friend. It is to share the stories of Tamagotchi Minna de Hation and her friends with the users of Tamagotchi Minna de Hation in the safe environment of the official Peacemaker RPG. This game is an enjoyable RPG offering the strength of the official Peacemaker RPG that can turn the page with ease. Please look forward to this title. Thank you for your continued support.

Q: CUDA Heterogeneous Raytracing I am writing a raytracing program for visualization purposes. I want to do this using CUDA, but I am having difficulty finding a way of handling the branching - I wish to create a shadow map, but as the shadow maps might come from different locations I need to track the ray's origin. My first thoughts were: Combine all the trees into a single CUDA array, and create a block of threads that just iterate through all the rays. This means that I need to have a load of threads and a block that can produce a thread every single time. Use a runtime DFS - traverse the ray-tree and find the root node, and start branching. Then keep branching until I have exhausted all the other nodes. Both of these ideas seem terribly wasteful and I cannot figure out a way of doing this without making a ton of threads and blocks that would not be used. Does anyone have any thoughts as to how this might be done? Should I consider something else, like the N-space raytracing algorithm? I am writing for Windows 7. A: Raytracing is a computationally heavy task. If you can use C++ or any lower level languages, you should go for it. If you're not familiar with the language but still familiar with CUDA, you could look at the OpenACC version of CUDA, which is similar to OpenMP on the CPU, and you can code in the same language. I recently heard about some of the implementations in CUDA. But they seem optimized for architectural work and not for heavy applications. The second option is a general pathfinding technique, in the runtime. From what I remember, it is much more straightforward to implement such techniques and generate the images. If you want to generate a runtime image, go with #2. As for the raytracing, try the OpenCL-based methods implemented by the Silicon Graphics Lab. If you are not familiar with either CUDA, C/C++ or OpenCL, you will have to opt for OpenACC. Its predecessor was the Plan 9 Acc device driver, which is very optimized for sequential applications. It generates code similar to OpenMP. So to summarize, if you are familiar with OpenCL, take it for a test drive. If you like it, you can start writing the necessary device drivers. If you are familiar with CUDA, and
