treat null values like strings in mongodb aggregation? when should mongodb treat null value as empty string in aggregation framework? a = db.coll.aggregate({$grou

p: { _id: "", name: { $first: "$name" } } });
a.forEach(printjson(_id) ); result "_id" : "",
"name" : "" or it should not be treated as empty string a = db.coll.aggregate({ $gro up: { _id: "", name: { $first: "$name" } } });
a.forEach(printjson(_id) ); result "_id" : "",
"name" : "" A: No, it doesn't. You can test this by adding a custom filter to an empty field: > db.coll.find({ _id: 0 }) { "_id" : 0, "name" : "" } > db.coll.aggregate( ... { ...
$group: { ... _id: "", ... name: { ... $first:
"$name" ... } ... } ... }, { ... $project: { ... _id: true, ... name: true ... } ... }) {
"result" : [ { "_id" : null, "name" : null } ], "ok" : 1 } So, MongoDB can tell that the value was actually null, and "ignore" it.
Why might you want to do this? You may want to distinguish between empty string and null values. By default, you could have the first type be populated to a field when the second type actually has something in the field, and that would be a strange thing to happen. Also, you might want to extract different metadata from those 2 different values. If you actually have 2 different fields with 2 different types, you may have to use distinct and that may be out of
